

Diamond Dry

BASEBALL DIAMOND FACTS

- 1" of regulation baseball infield area is equal to 65 tons of material (sand/clay).

Therefore, 10 tons of calcined clay at $1500, incorporated into 4" of infield area (260 tons) is equal to 3 puppies peeing into an Olympic size swimming pool.

- Diamond Dry is a surface drying compound which has tested proven absorption capability of almost 4 times that of Turface.
- Diamond Dry does not compact a field as stated in Turface promotional literature. Diamond Dry makes it possible to play on fields which normally could not be played on even after applying Turface or any calcined clay. The compaction results from playing on that otherwise unplayable condition.

Therefore, under wet conditions and your pitching staff is shot, don't use Diamond Dry - call the game off and say we don't want to compact our field.

- A leading field maintenance personality has been requested to show the difference between the values of Diamond Dry and Turface in getting a batters box or pitchers mound ready for a game after wet conditions. He has refused since he is paid to promote Turface though he knows there is no comparison.

Diamond Dry can make a batters box or a pitchers mound playable when a calcined clay will not. It has been proven 100's and 100's of times.

Turface is a brand name of calcined clay formerly owned by International Mineral Corporation. It has been around for decades and decades and tested by field supervisors over the generations. The true value of a calcined clay additive compared to Diamond Dry on a one to one basis established Diamond Dry as the No. 1 field maintenance product available to baseball. IMC sold Turface to Aimcor which has spent big bucks in promotion....same products, same results. Question is, do you want to use a product that works or a product with a big promotional name.

- Diamond Dry warranty:

If you buy Diamond Dry and it does not do a better job than any calcined clay in getting your pitchers mound, batters box, etc. playable under wet conditions, we will refund full cost exclusive of shipping and handling.
